

I was walking back to my van, my hands grubby from helping garden at my daughter's High School.

My family had been refugees for most of the Second World War. The thought of leaving someone abandoned was abhorrent to me. I asked this stranger to give me signal that she was safe.

